ABSTRACT

An electronic system may include an application programming interface for use in conjunction with a virtual switch. In some embodiments, the electronic system may comprise a processor; a network interface controller including a hardware port, a virtual switch comprising software executed by the processor, and an application programming interface ("API") running on the processor and usable by a application to interface with the virtual switch.